—Major Morgan to-day addressed a letter to the Superintendent of Police and of the Fire Alarm Telegraph lines acknowledging the receipt of their report on the electric connections of the District and asking for an estimate of the probable expense of purchasing all the telegraph and telephone lines needed by the District. The project under consideration, and which is an original idea of Major Brock's, is to bring under the exclusive control of the District all means of connection between District property, and in that way insure a prompt delivery of messages, a speedy report of all accidents and incidents to the automorphism of the property, and in that way insure a prompt ing detective information. According to Major Brock, the yearly rental of the wires now equals half their value and it would be economical to purchase them.

Smallwood succeeded in getting to shore, but Anderson sank with the scow, and was drowned. So far, the body has not been recovered or the vessel raised. The drowned man was a tall mulatto, about 35 years old, and had been a resident of the District for many years. The Last Bulletin Causes Despon-

Very Little Hope Left.

The Most Alarming Period.

Bliss Says It Is Now.

Waiting for the Noon Bulletin.

The appearance of the midday bulletin was awaited with intense anxiety. There was a larger crowd surrounding the gates of the grounds than had assembled at any previous hour during the day, and within the Mansion quite a number of people were gathered, all waiting for tidings from the sick-room. Several anxious individuals endeavored to secure the news in advance by peeping through the key-hole of the door opening from the consultation room into the hall, but they were promptly driven away.

hall, but they were promptly driven away.

Merely Lingering.

There was some delay in the bulletin, and as usual there was greater anxiety to knew the contents. The gravest fore-leadings had seized upon the community, and it is stated that even those who professed a hope only did so because their wishes were that way and not because they had anything to base their hope upon. The less sanguine asserted freely that the President was merely lingering, and that his death is merely a question of a few days. His ability to rally from the present tax upon his already over-exhausted system was doubted by the majority.

Decidedly Discouraging.

Decidedly Discouraging. The bulletin was decidedly discouraging, after what had been said about the President's being brighter and better during the forenoon. It was read with the gravest anxiety, and the feeling has now become general that the President cannot live.

"At this hour, half-past 1, the President's pulse and temperature are high—pulse 118, temperature, 100°. During several hours last night his pulse was 120. In the early morning it fell to 108. It is hoped that the parotid swelling has found a slight relief by a discharge of pus through the right ear. He continues to swallow liquid food in adequate supply.

The Most Alarming Period.

The President continues quietly sleeping, out not gaining. Dr. Bliss says the present is the most alarming period in the history of the case, and that it is now a mere question of sustenance. He says the President has yet a chance of recovery, but it is a

All the morning the inmates of the White House tried to think there was ground for hope, but the attempt weakened after the bulletin. The growing hope that the new discharge from the gland would cause a favorable turn in the case has been disappointed. The contrary indications are overbalancing. The truth is so fully impressed on all minds that nothing now can raise a doubt.

STILL ALIVE,

So Say the Last Reports.

Interesting Interview with Dr. Bliss

The President's Children Informed of their Father's Condition.

2:45 P. M.

No Hope for Rally Yet. The President still dozes and sleeps, but vakes frequently and takes nourishment. The draining of the gland continues, but the swelling remains. There appears to be no rapid decline, but the hoped-for rally is not yet indicated.

In a Stapor.

A report was received from the sick-room at 2:30 o'clock that there had been no improvement in the President's condition, and that he is sleeping most of the afternoon in a sort of a stupor.
Still Alive and That's All.

The above has since been confirmed, and

It has even been found necessary to give him stimulants, and brandy and to give him stimulants, and brandy and to give him stimulants. milk have been administered. The Children Informed of their Father's Precarious Condition.

Dr. Boynton had already informed the boys of their father's precarious condition, and Mr. Brown being fully aware of the situation, refrained from breaking in upon the thoughts of his young companions.

As before stated, at this hour the secretary's office was almost deserted. Mr. Hendley, confidential clerk, sat gravely at his desk writing letters in silence. An ominous silence prevailed in the adjoining room where the clerks essayed to work, but really too much engrossed with their own feelings to speak of the probabilities. Major Pruden moved noiselessiy from room to room, a sad expression upon his face indicating his dread for the worst, and the only sound to break the painful stillness was the clicking of the telegraph instrument, as it finished to the country the sad intelligence that the President was no better.

Amother Important Interview with Dr. Hiss.

Another Important Interview with Dr. Bliss. At 2 p. m. to-day the following conversation took place between Dr. Bliss and an agent of the National Associated Press:

"Doctor, that was not as good a bulletin as I should like to have seen." "I suppose not." "A pretty high pulse and temperature for noon, was it not?"

"Yes, it was so." "Well, Doctor, isn't the case more critial now than at any time yet?" "Yes; I think it is." "Sufficiently so to cause alarm?"

ing, if you please; but I think he still has a chance for recovery." "While there's life there's hope?" "Of course. But there is a chance for re-

"It is a very grave situation. Yes, alarmcovery here." "But It's a Slim One."

"Would not you all feel better satisfied if Dr. Agnew was here ?" "We should be glad to have him here for his advice is always acceptable, as indeed it should be, but the course is clear. The regular government of the patient continues. If a question should arise in re gard to treatment, Dr. Agnew would be sent for. No such question has arisen, and he has not been sent for."

"Does Mrs. Garfield appreciate the situa-"Does Mrs. Garheld appreciate ton?"

"She fully comprehends its gravity. She is by the side of the President nearly all the time now. She remarks all conditions, and to her we owe some knowledge of the latest symptoms. We always talk over the case with her when she is near us. But she has never formally consulted us as to the probable result. We have not yet deemed the case hopeless enough for that."

"She still keeps up courage?"

"Perfectly."

"Perfectly."
"What is the greatest factor in the gravity of the case ?"

" Inanition."
" You don't fear brain trouble?" "You mean from the effect of glandular disturbance, I suppose." "Yes, from the absorption of broken down

"Does the swelling go down?"
"We have not removed the dressings since morning; but judge from surroundings that it has slightly decreased."
"The drain through the ear is good?"

"And the pus haalthy?"

"He continues to take food well?"
"Yes; he has taken a good quantity to day." The stomach has been causing no trou-

"That is the whole matter now. It is simply a question of sustentation."

"You think he gets nourishment enough?" What are these composed of now?"

"Yes, whiskey. We suspended the enemata a day and a-half, and they were resumed because he tolerated them, and the y are best for sustentation."

"Does his mind wander much?"

"You think the blood does not cause this occasional wandering ?"
"No; it is due to the enemic condition of the brain."
(Which it was learned later is an indication of the inadequate nourishment of the system).

"Do you find any new unfavorable symp-toms in the case?"
"None at all."

depressing. The Doctor evidently considers the chance "a slim one."

In a subsequent conversation with one of the surgeons in the case, the opinion was expressed that if the warse comes to the worst, the President would not be apt to die under three or four days. At least he would not die suddenly, except by some new and acute complication.

Prevails among some people that large stores charge higher prices than those of moderate size. This is wrong. Large Cash Buyers can Sell Cheaper than small buyers. This is parlicularly the case at
